A short narration of the program
Orientation Program for First-Year Bachelor of Arts (F.Y.B.A.) Students  St. Vincent College welcomed its newly admitted First-Year Bachelor of Arts (F.Y.B.A.) students with a purposeful and value-oriented orientation program held on July 5 and 9, 2025. Designed as a foundational introduction to undergraduate life, the program sought to orient students to the academic expectations, institutional ethos, and support structures that would shape their journey in higher education. Rather than a perfunctory induction, the orientation was structured as a reflective and informative entry point into a learning community grounded in both contemporary educational reforms and enduring Jesuit principles.  The program commenced on July 5 under the guidance of Sister Madhuri Brahmane, who led a comprehensive session on the National Education Policy (NEP) 2020 and its implementation within the college's B.A. curriculum. She clearly articulated key structural elements such as the Choice-Based Credit System (CBCS), the semesterized academic calendar, multidisciplinary learning opportunities, Skill Enhancement Courses (SECs), and the flexible multiple entry and exit options. Beyond administrative details, Sister Madhuri contextualized these changes within a broader pedagogical shift—from rote memorization toward student-centered, experiential, and holistic learning. Students were encouraged to view their education as an active, integrative process that blends intellectual growth with personal and social development.  The session also outlined practical aspects of academic life, including the internal assessment framework, attendance policies, and the role of co-curricular activities and community engagement in earning credits and fostering well-rounded development. Emphasis was placed on the availability of academic support systems—such as faculty mentorship, library resources, and counseling services—ensuring students felt informed and supported from day one.

The orientation resumed on July 9 with a special address by Fr. Dr. Kenneth Misquitta, S.J., Director of St. Vincent College, whose presence and words anchored the program in the institution's deeper identity. Speaking with warmth, clarity, and pastoral insight, Fr. Misquitta introduced students to the Jesuit educational tradition that animates the college's mission. He elaborated on core Ignatian values, beginning with cura personalis—the commitment to care for each student as a unique individual with intellectual, emotional, and spiritual dimensions. He spoke of magis, not as competitive excellence, but as the continuous striving to do “more for the greater good,” and of the ideal of forming “men and women for and with others”—graduates who lead with empathy, integrity, and a sense of social responsibility.

Fr. Misquitta encouraged students to approach their college years not merely as a path to a degree, but as a formative period for character, discernment, and purpose. He invited them to engage critically with ideas, build meaningful relationships, and remain open to growth beyond the classroom. His address resonated as both an institutional welcome and a moral compass for the journey ahead.

Held in a respectful and inclusive atmosphere, the two-part orientation successfully balanced structural clarity with philosophical grounding. It equipped students with the practical knowledge needed to navigate their academic program while inviting them into a community that values curiosity, compassion, and contribution. By integrating NEP's forward-looking framework with the timeless dimensions of Jesuit education, St. Vincent College affirmed its commitment to forming not only competent scholars but conscientious citizens prepared to serve a complex and changing world.
